Glam Prefab

Back in the mid-sixties renowned midcentury architect Andrew Geller designed a prefab house that was then marketed by Macy's. The result: a more than 200-house community in Montauk called Leisurama. One of these historic relics, replete with cedar shingles and original wood paneling, has come on the market for $835,000. The 0.17 acre-parcel comes with cathedral ceiling, fireplace and the original bedroom furniture. The listing agent is Patti Leber of Town & Country Real Estate.
