Town & Country's New Hire Is Lifelong East Hampton Resident- Reid Offers Real Insight

Rick Murphy | October 22, 2019

If you want real insight into the community you are moving into, take this advice: talk to the locals who were raised there.

Town & Country Real Estate's latest catch, Michael Reid, a lifelong resident of East Hampton, is a perfect example.

Reid lives in East Hampton Village with his wife, Laura, and their two sons. He is deeply rooted in his community, volunteering with the East Hampton Fire Department and is currently the Lieutenant of Engine Company #2.

He works as a public safety dispatcher in Southampton Village. In his free time, Michael enjoys kayaking and fishing.

Read between the lines: he knows the special hideaways where locals find serenity.

Reid is "extremely passionate about my work in real estate and I work hard for my clients and customers until the deal is closed."

He came into real estate after working with drone photography for business across the East End. "I made the move into the real estate business after seeing the increased use of drone photos and especially the use of video tours," he said.

"I feel that I have an advantage by using video tours and social media to market the client's property. I enjoy seeing a client's satisfaction when they see their property being showcased," he added.
